"This book deals with the very first third of our planet's long history covering all the major episodes as deciphered from the scattered rocks in all four corners of the Earth. Written by Andrew Glikson - a passionate sleuth of all earth sciences involving decades of field and laboratory investigations - has produced a grand modern overview of the Hadean and Archaean Earth." . Professor Victor Gostin, University of Adelaide . "This book is a welcome and refreshing addition to the literature of Archaean geology. It provides pithy and up to date information on the great Archaean terrains and presents a scheme of evolution of the early crust, from mafic-ultramafic crust to tonalite-trondhjemitegreenstone crust to greenstone-granite and high-grade metamorphic crust." . Professor Hugh Davies, University of New Guinea . "The manuscript written by Dr. A. Glikson is concerned with the early history of the Earth and the applicability of the uniformitarian doctrine for its interpretation, that is, an essential question for modern geological science. Extensive analytical data accumulated over the last few decades of regarding the structure and composition of the cratons, mainly southern hemisphere, allows to affirm the essential role of large-scale impact events in the origin of mafic-ultramafic and TTG rock associations characteristic of the Early Precambrian, as well as the predominance of accompanying vertical tectonic movements." . Professor Victor Masaitis, Karpinski Geological Institute, Russia . "Andrew Glikson has presented an excellent synthesis relating to the history of the early earth being an up to date compilation & evaluation of the status of our knowledge on this subject. This synthesis is made all the more significant in that the author is a well versed scientist having made many contributions..."
