The mules, already jaded by travelling across the sandy plain, went slowly along, their heads dropping to the ground. The pale moon, occasionally overshadowed by clouds, threw a ghastly light over the desert, and skeletons of animals glistening in her beams, strewn the way, adding horror to the scene. Shortly before dawn we entered some hills to the westward where the heat was less intense. Three of the mules were unable to go farther, and their saddles and packs were placed on other animals, and men left with them, together with some reeds and beans and a small supply of water. We were now all on foot, our animals having barely sufficient strength to carry their saddles. At daylight we began to scatter and those who could go in advance did so, for our thirst was beginning to be intolerable. It was not until 10 A.m., after twenty hours of continuous march, completely prostrated with heat, toil, hunger and thirst, that we reached the Agua del Tio Meso. This camping-ground (which is called on the maps Agua del Tomaso) has two small pools fed by tiny springs. The water in the pools we found barely drinkable; the grass was scanty and salt; but when mules are starving, they are not particular in their choice of food. The men who had been left with the mules joined us late in the afternoon; they had suffered much, but brought in all the animals....
