It seems so silly to spend time teaching our kids about nutrition and then not provide nutritious foods for them. You are funding a bunch of initiatives around the country to teach kids about nutrition as I understand it. Are you doing any-thing with regard to the actual providing of nutritious foods at schools IETZ Dr. D. That is not the role of the CDC, but we are very inter-ested in alternative strategies around the provision of nutritious foods in school lunch lines. For example, we recently became part of a memo of understanding between USDA and HHS around the promotion of fruits and vegetables in lunch lines, and it has al-ready been shown that reducing the price of fresh fruits and vege-tables increases consumption. What we are trying to look for are sustainable strategies such as increasing the prices on less health-ful items in the lunch line, thereby sustaining subsidies on fruits and vegetables. That is one alternative to making other choices available to children and teenagers. Senator B. The idea of funding a lot of these State ini-INGAMAN tiatives is, as I understand it - and I have always thought - not just in this area, but in all areas, is to figure out which strategies work and then replicate them around the country. How far are we from knowing which of these strategies work and being in a position to say...
